

Colonel Campbell made arrangements for care and treatment of his soldiers wounded at Kings Mountain. Several remained in patriot homes in Rutherford and Burke County North Carolina. Hayter's wound was sufficiently serious that John Scott seemed to think he could use a doctor's care. Instead, Hayter insisted that he wanted to go home. John Scott and two others escorted Hayter to Dutch Gap "as a consequence of danger at all times." The officers usually assigned two escorts for each wounded soldier.

Abraham M. and Susannah Hayter and their family of seven children moved from Frederick County Maryland to the Holston in 1776. Israel Hayter was their oldest child, by that time age 21. They settled in Poor Valley on the south side of Clinch Mountain on both sides of Wolf Creek (another one, not the Wolf Creek of the muster ground). There are two Hayter's Gaps, one across Clinch Mountain to Elk Garden in Russell County, the other where Wolf Creek flows through Little Mountain to the North Fork of the Holston.

Three Hayter sisters married John Jamison, Robert Allison, and William Allison who are in some lists as being soldiers in the Kings Mountain expedition.

The 1782 Washington County tax list shows the Hayters in Aaron Lewis' Precinct, Abraham Hayter (transcribed as Heiler in New River Notes), William Hayter, and Israel Hayter. William died in 1797 and Israel assisted William's wife Margaret with the estate settlement.

In April 1783, the Washington County magistrates reviewed war casualties and voted to continue county support for some of them. Israel Hayter was not one of them. There is no record of Hayter in the federal pension archives for invalid support in the 1800 teens. Seven children are further evidence that Israel's wound healed thoroughly.

Samuel Newell remembered Israel Hayter and listed him as wounded in his 04Aug1823 letter to David Campbell.

Israel Hayter and Anne Crawford Hayter raised seven children.
